Spring Cleaning

After an especially wet winter, with rain and foul weather serving as a great excuse to hole up in your home, the arrival of spring is a perfect time to throw open the windows and doors, and clear out the clutter. But what about that trout-printed tie Uncle Joe gave you, or the camel shaped Chia pet from Aunt Cleo? You'll never use the stuff, but it'd be a shame to throw it away. Fortunately for you, and for all the rest of us too, Goodwill has a 90-year history of taking in your tacky threads and neglected bric-a-brac, and finding them new homes in the wardrobes and apartments of young hipsters. This year they're making it even easier than ever, thanks to a new partnership with CityPark, by opening up three new donation sites in the downtown area. The first, located in the CityPark parking lot at 240 Pacific Avenue, is scheduled to open just in time for spring cleaning. So clear out your crib, take all the usable stuff to the nearest drop-off spot, and score tons of good karma by helping Goodwill in their quest to alleviate poverty.
